Guam

Geographically, the American day begins on Guam, and Guamanians were quick to say: "Guam, where America's Bicentennial begins. Where better to begin the Bicentennial celebration than on Guam?" With that in mind, the Guam American Revolution Bicentennial Commission planned the first official celebration that would kick off the American Bicentennial on the morning of March 1, 1975, the date specified in Public Law 93-179 as the beginning of the Bicentennial era.

Shortly after midnight on March 1 (still February 28 elsewhere in the United States), Guam's Bicentennial child, 10 year old Patrick Guzman, waved goodbye to hundreds of Guamanians who had gathered at the airport to see him off on a trip that included Honolulu, San Francisco, Washington, D.C. and Los Angeles. He carried a message to fellow Americans which encouraged them to use the Bicentennial celebration as a time for renewed dedication to the ideals of a democratic nation and to chart the nation's course of action for a brighter future enriched by our past.

Thus, Saturday, March 1, 1975 was the official beginning of the Bicentennial on Guam, as it was for all America, and all residents were encouraged to participate and involve themselves in Bicentennial activities. The Guam ARBC extended an invitation to Guamanians living on the United States mainland to visit the territory during 1976 and to participate in the year-long festival.

Guests found much to enhance their stay. Both the historic old palaces, which are considered to be the oldest buildings on Guam, and their surrounding grounds were restored and provided attractive sites for natives and tourists alike. The 4,000 acre Bolands Conservation Reserve was developed into a wildlife and outdoor recreation area that includes an artificial lake. Visitors found, too, that the outdoor recreation facilities on Cosos Island had been renovated, restored and further developed.

The people of Guam are strongly patriotic and have a long adherence to American ideals. Many of their Bicentennial activities were directed toward the democratic principles of their ancestors, the Chamorros, and that of all Americans. Even before official American policy allowed Vietnamese refugees into the United States, Guam's Governor Ricardo J. Bordallo, cognizant of the impending collapse of the South Vietnamese government, invited the South Vietnamese to "look to Guam as a haven."

His invitation triggered Operation New Life. As part of that program, the Guam Bicentennial commission sponsored a "Fiesta Hospitality" for nearly 400 refugees on May 1, 1975. Since refugees were not allowed to leave their compounds, native foods were prepared in the village of Nerizo and transported via a Bicentennial Caravan to the site. Interpretors assisted the Guamanians in spreading the Bicentennial word throughout the camp.

Early in 1976, Governor Bordallo looked for a Bicentennial project that would show the proud heritage of the Guamanian people and at the same time depict the freedom that all Americans enjoy. Thus the "Latte of Freedom" was born.

"Latte" is a symbol of the long cultural history of the Chamorro people. It was first described by Spanish explorers, who, in recording their travels to the Pacific, noted that most of the buildings were "made of wood and are erected on long column-like stones" in the shape of pyramids.

The "Latte of Freedom" will look a great deal like the torch in the hand of the Statue of Liberty. There will be an eternal flame which will rise from the top, acting as a kind of beacon of freedom. This symbol, equivalent to the torch of the Statue of Liberty, will stand as a "Pacific doorway" to the United States in the same way that the Statue of Liberty is the "Atlantic doorway" for foreign visitors.

Other Bicentennial projects also were undertaken. At the University of Guam, resources and courses relating to the history of Guam were developed, as were teaching and reference materials for other schools on the island. A book was published depicting the growth of democracy in Guam through the development of the Guam legislature. And because Guam's architectural history spans centuries—from prehistoric structures, Spanish forts and bridges to recent, modern structures—a guidebook was published and depicts, through photographs, plans and narrative, this evolution.

The first American flag to greet Independence Day, 1976, when the day dawned on Guam, has been placed in the official time capsule at the National Archives in Washington, D.C. The flag, which had flown on the Seventh Fleet Flagship U.S.S. Fox, was raised on Guam at 12:01 a.m. to welcome the nation's 200th birthday. It was delivered to the United States with a special message: ". . . it [the flag] is presented to the people in perpetuity as the Bicentennial flag which launched the nation's third century. This salute from the people of Guam is sent with love to all other Americans 'from sea to shining sea. . . .'"

Guam's enthusiastic participation gave special meaning to the Bicentennial of our nation.

Hawaii

Hawaii's Bicentennial program during the past year can be best described with the state's colorful colloquial phrase: "Chop Suey."

In it was a bit of everything—for everybody.

It came together after three years of all-island efforts by many hundreds of people meeting, conferring, arguing, imploring. And then, doing things. Often, their own things.

The program ranged from the evanescence of a sand-building contest at Waikiki Beach to the sturdy uprightness of a restored church steeple at Kaupo, Maui; from the melodic unity of a world-wide ukulele contest to the complex harmony of a special symphonic work; from a backward reach of hundreds of years to retrace canoe voyages of early Polynesians in their discovery of Hawaii to an architectural exhibit showing how Hawaiians might be living in the quadricentennial year of 2176.

For 1976, it began the morning of January 1 with a statewide "gathering in prayer," a five minute spiritual offering simultaneously telecast/broadcast throughout Hawaii—a brief time when all Hawaii was united in a common spirit of thankfulness.

And it continued from January through December with hundreds of other events extolling patriotic themes and examining Hawaii's unique cultural and ethnic contributions to our 200 year old nation.

There were cultural events ranging from artistic displays to festivals featuring the many different peoples of Hawaii: Hawaiian, Japanese, Chinese, Portuguese, Filipino, Samoan and Tahitian.

A Hawaiian pageant, The Golden Gift, opened the year and highlighted the Captain Cook era of Hawaiian history. Held in the rotunda of the new State Capitol building, which represents a volcano, the program brought to life a sense of cohesion between the old and the new Hawaii. A similar program, The First Aloha, ended the year in the same unique setting.

Both the Japanese and Chinese communities staged numerous activities that brought into focus the contributions of the Orient to historical and present day Hawaii.

But the Bicentennial was also books, ranging from a translation of political commentary in various old Hawaiian newspapers to the state's very first Encyclopedia of Hawaii and a series of pamphlets which covered the major books about Hawaii in more than a dozen categories.

Several movies and slide shows were produced: one depicting the impact of Hawaii's artists on its culture, another capturing the wildlife—the sea and land birds—of Hawaii's remote Leeward Islands.

Many Bicentennial projects were helped with grant money from the American Revolution Bicentennial Administration, state appropriations and funds raised by the commission from the public. All projects generally fell within the three national themes: Heritage '76, calling to mind the fundamental precepts of the past; Festival USA, engaging the realities and opportunities of the present; and Horizons '76, embracing the challenge of the future.

It all sort of came together on the weekend of July 4th, with dozens of public events, including the largest parade in Hawaii's history. The Bicentennial year, long cuffed about by critics, suddenly got rave reviews.

For a fleeting moment, in Hawaii and elsewhere, 1976 seemed the best of the 200 years since America's revolutionaries stood fast for justice, freedom and the fundamental rights of man.

Idaho

Idaho planned an extensive array of events and activities for its Bicentennial celebration. They ranged from the restoration of an historic Indian mission to the dedication of a new science museum. The preservation of the Indian mission was a cooperative effort by the Idaho Bicentennial Commission, the Catholic Diocese of Boise and the Coeur d'Alene Indian tribe. The Mission of the Sacred Heart at Cataldo (sometimes known as the "Cataldo Mission") is the state's oldest building still standing. It was begun in 1848 and completed in 1853, and is a unique tribute to the Coeur d'Alene Indians and the Jesuit missionaries who helped the tribe.

The Intermountain Science Experience Center was constructed in Idaho Falls. It is the largest and most elaborate science museum in the interior northwest and will serve as an aid to visitors of all ages in acquiring a basic understanding of scientific contributions in many areas, among them nuclear science and agriculture.

There were other impressive projects. The Veterans Memorial State Park in Boise was dedicated on July 4, 1976. It is truly unique, for it provides, within the city limits of the state's largest urban area, a lovely green park and environmental interpretive center. Also dedicated was the Malad Gorge State Park in south central Idaho, a rugged but beautiful setting only a few miles off Interstate Highway 80. Both are designated as Bicentennial parks.

Idaho had two impressive "firsts" in its Bicentennial program. Its Bicentennial commission was the first to mount a large-scale effort to develop an oral history project; and it was the first state to plan a statewide language bank where non-English speaking visitors can talk to interpreters.

Locally, Cassia County and the town of Rigby worked on a history of the area; Benneville mounted a clean-up campaign; Lewiston developed a walking tour; Marsing created a city park and made improvements to its river banks; Pocatello restored a magnificent old historic home and conducted tours of historic sites; and Twin Falls developed a museum which depicts the American Indian and his history in the western part of the U.S., from Alaska to Mexico.

All in all, there were some 43 local, city and county Bicentennial commissions, and each made valuable contributions.

Two local performing arts companies, the Ballet Folk of Moscow and the Antique Festival Theater, focused their efforts on serving the needs of the many small and widely scattered towns in Idaho and helped them in staging Bicentennial activities and festivities. Both troupes were assisted by IBC grants.

Idaho planned a major involvement in the Bicentennial Parade of American Music. A band, orchestra and choir were selected competitively by audition; these groups, together with the Ballet Folk of Moscow, performed throughout the state and later gave performances on "Idaho Day" at Independence Square in Philadelphia and at the Kennedy Center in Washington, D.C. And in cooperation with the Idaho Association of Broadcasters, a statewide committee organized a series of 13 one-half hour radio programs featuring the music of Idaho.

Throughout the state, citizens worked to make the Bicentennial something special, and with the present memories and future-oriented projects, the many contributions of Idaho will last for years to come.

Illinois

From the confluence of the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers, across the rolling plains, down the crowded boulevards of Chicago to the precipitous heights around Galena, the people of Illinois poured forth their hopes and dreams in a variety of Bicentennial projects and events.

While they are visible evidence of many activities, the archived records, newspaper clippings, awards, banners, buttons and medallions in no way indicate the hours of work by millions of people: people who contributed a part of their lives to celebrate 200 years of the American way of life and their future.

Among the more visible projects throughout the state was the official Illinois Bicentennial Commission medallion design contest. Sponsored each year for four years, the subsequent sale of the medallions provided mementos for the future.

The Illinois Bicentennial Commission displayed continuing interest in the school Bicentennial program by funding a week-long workshop for teachers to prepare a Teachers Bicentennial Resource Guide. The guide was produced in sufficient quantity by the commission, with a private donation, to allow free distribution of a copy to each public library in the state and multiple copies to all Illinois elementary and secondary schools.

Many institutions prepared extensive Bicentennial programs. Few were more extensive than the three phase exhibit, America's Inventive Genius, at the Chicago Museum of Science and Industry. The exhibit traced America's scientific and technical heritage and showed how such technical know-how was applied to meet the nation's social, economic, industrial and defense needs.

In cooperation with the Illinois Arts Council, a multifaceted statewide project, Illinois Architecture: A Revolution on the Prairie, featured tours, exhibits, films and pamphlets detailing the contributions of the Chicago School of Architecture. During the Bicentennial, emphasis on Illinois' unique architectural heritage was enhanced by ArchiCenter, an architectural information and tour center in downtown Chicago.

A special Illinois Bicentennial Commission concern was that Bicentennial programs and events be available to as many people as wished to participate. In conjunction with the American Issues Forum, the commission urged Bicentennial planners to see that events could be enjoyed by handicapped citizens and held several meetings and conferences to accomplish that end.

As a truly lasting reminder of the Bicentennial, the commission funded a sound and light presentation at the Old State Capitol. Operated by the Illinois State Historical Library, the program is a highly sophisticated electronic recreation of the story of Abraham Lincoln and the building that served for 24 years as the center of his public life. The drama of those years is recreated each summer night in Springfield, a city rich with Lincoln-related historical sites.

The Illinois Labor History Society, in conjunction with the AFL–CIO and the Illinois Bicentennial Commission, prepared a well-received photographic display, On the Job in Illinois: Then and Now. Recent photographs were interspersed with older prints which highlighted the changes in our ways of working in modern times. Crafts unknown to many people today were recreated by means of the exhibit.

Always a major Illinois attraction during August, the 1976 Illinois State Fair was particularly important because of "Heritage Square." During the fair, special ethnic exhibits, dances, crafts, music and foods were featured. Ethnic groups who contributed to the founding, settling and building of Illinois proudly displayed their heritage.

As grand as many projects were, none held more importance than a local school Bicentennial festival, a county fair Bicentennial contest or the erection of a flagpole. By such activities, each resident signified pride in the United States and faith in the future.

Indiana

The Bicentennial celebration in Indiana was as diverse as the citizenry that populates the state. In many cases, months—even years—of organized preparation climaxed in the "biggest and best" Independence Day seen by Hoosiers.

The statehouse belonged to the people on the 4th of July, as over 15,000 came to join the festivities sponsored by the IARBC. For many, it was their first visit to the seat of Indiana's government. The day's events centered around history-making—the signing of documents which reaffirmed the principles of the Declaration of Independence. They will be preserved for future generations.

Elsewhere in the state, the spirit ran just as high. Vincennes, the city that boasts of Indiana's most direct link with the Revolutionary era, celebrated with the month long Conquest of the Old Northwest Festival. Vincennes was one of the few places west of the Appalachian Mountains to play an active part in the colonial liberation. George Rogers Clark led his band of volunteers into Vincennes and captured Fort Sackville from the British in February of 1779, thus establishing America's claim to the Northwest Territory.

The Indiana State Museum in Indianapolis has developed a major walk-through exhibit on the life and career of George Rogers Clark. The highlight of the exhibit is an environmental theater depicting the march and attack on the British at Vincennes. An outreach component including film and curriculum units brings the program to all of Indiana's citizens.

Communities across the state celebrated with a range of parades, games, picnics, talent contests and fireworks—a multitude of variations of old-fashioned fun. Pekin, Indiana celebrated the Bicentennial in much the same way as other small communities across the land. But it had a special distinction: this year's observance was the 146th such event in Pekin, the oldest without-a-miss 4th of July celebration in the nation.

July 5 marked the dedication of Bedford's Bicentennial gift to the nation—a lifesize limestone sculpture of Washington crossing the Delaware. The sculpture, weighing 30 tons, consists of 26 separate pieces of stone expertly fitted to appear as a single piece. The community of Bedford and the area limestone industry raised an estimated $100,000 to complete the project to reflect their patriotism and their pride in the rich limestone resource. The sculpture was donated to the Washington Crossing Foundation in Pennsylvania, and is now situated on the banks of the Delaware River where Washington made his famous crossing.

National attention has also been directed to the Indiana State Prison (ISP) Bicentennial project. ISP was the nation's only prison declared an official Bicentennial Community. The inmates' projects included art exhibits, Red Cross training programs, audio-visual programming and special activities undertaken by special interest clubs. Specially bound braille transcriptions of historic American documents were presented by the ISP community to the Library of Congress.

Another project unique to the nation was undertaken by the Indiana Department of Mental Health/Central State Hospital, which was designated a Bicentennial Community. A series of public forums, a traveling exhibit and a festival program at the state hospital were designed to chip away at the myths, embarrassment and fear that surround mental illness and to promote citizen contact with the patients.

In many communities, Bicentennial planners have left lasting civic improvements or monuments—such as the Emanual Hatfield Museum in Newburgh and the newly renovated Obelisk Square, located in downtown Indianapolis. For future generations, Evansville developed a monument to the ideals of individual freedom—the Evansville Bicentennial Tribute. Others have developed a stronger sense of local history and of the ethnic heritage of the citizenry. In community after community, previously untapped talents came to light, and a cooperative spirit developed among community organizations which will provide a positive force for the next century.

Iowa

The Bicentennial in the state of Iowa was a grassroots celebration involving thousands of Iowans. Activities of every size and nature were carried on. On July 4, 1976, Iowa was first on the BINET system for the number of projects and events Iowans planned and were carrying out for the Bicentennial.

Restoration was the major focus. Homes, rural schoolhouses, log cabins and museums were restored to their original state.

Next, Iowans looked to the future with the construction of museums, libraries, senior citizen homes, tennis courts and new parks. All 811 of Iowa's Bicentennial Communities planned at least one project for a better Iowa.

Celebrations were evident all over the state during 1975 and 1976. The 4th of July proved to be a festive occasion beyond expectations. Parades, old-fashioned games and church services showed the pride Iowans have in our history and the importance the past plays in our future.

The Iowa American Revolution Bicentennial Commission endorsed several statewide projects, putting an emphasis on youth.

Iowa had a school recognition program which acknowledged the efforts of elementary and high schools in the Bicentennial. An Iowa history kit for fifth graders was funded by the commission from the sale of our state Bicentennial medallion. Kits were distributed to schools throughout the State of Iowa.

Another statewide project stressing the importance of agriculture was supported by the Iowa American Revolution Bicentennial Commission. The World Food Conference held at the Iowa State University at Ames was attended by people from throughout the world. Ways to improve agriculture in all countries was the main theme of the conference.

The continuing Living History Farms, a commission-endorsed project, stress agriculture. The farms depict farming in the 1800's, 1900's and the future. They are living museums, showing all phases of farm life.

A final report will be published by the Iowa American Revolution Bicentennial Commission. It will show the next generation what Iowans accomplished for the Bicentennial. A copy will be put in a time capsule, to be opened in 2075.

When future Iowans study the Bicentennial years, they will see a period of history when fellow Iowans not only looked back with pride, but ahead with hope.

Appendix

ARBA Reference Material

Additional complementary reference materials were prepared in limited quantities and have been placed with various institutions where researchers may have access to them. Below are descriptions of the materials, followed by a list of the repositories.

Comprehensive Index of Bicentennial Activities. The distribution of various Bicentennial activities by state and city can be easily ascertained from Volumes III, IV and V. However, the ARBA felt that students or historians might need the information broken out in different ways. Thus the ARBA used its computer facilities to prepare an index of all 66,484 Bicentennial activities, which is cross-referenced by subject, method of presentation, special group emphasis and key words in the titles.

Each entry in the index consists of a reference term (examples are AGRICULTURE, INDIAN, QUILTS, PAINTINGS), a project or event title, the BINET reference number and the volume and page of the final report on which the summary description of the project or event appears.

This index may also be used with the BINET master file (see below), which is organized by reference number.

Because of its size, conventional publication of the index was not practical, and thus it was produced only in microfiche form—27 four by six inch microfiche cards.

BINET Master File. The Bicentennial activity summaries listed in Volumes III, IV and V of this report represent less than half the information available in the BINET master file. To facilitate future research, the master file has been prepared in two forms. One is a three reel magnetic tape version, the other an equivalent 125 card microfiche version. Copies have been placed in appropriate archives.

Provided below are the catalogue card numbers assigned by the Library of Congress to the three primary ARBA reference publications.

The Bicentennial of the United States—A Final Report to the People, American Revolution Bicentennial Administration, Washington, D.C.: U.S. Government Printing Office, June 1977. Five volumes. L.C. No. 77-71949.

Comprehensive Index of Bicentennial Activities, ed. Edward K. Zimmerman, Washington, D.C.: American Revolution Bicentennial Administration, March 1977. Microfiche publication. L.C. No. 77-76760.

Bicentennial Information Network Master File, ed. Julian K. Morrison, III, Washington, D.C.: American Revolution Bicentennial Administration, March 1977. Microfiche publication. L.C. No. 77-76782.

BICENTENNIAL PROJECT REGISTER FORM – SIDE 2

EXPLANATION AND INSTRUCTIONS

USE THIS FORM FOR:
- General Bicentennial activities with no specific time and site orientation

USE THE EVENT CALENDAR FORM FOR:
- Activities which attract audiences at a specific date, time and place

USE BOTH FORMS WHEN:
- A group or series of events are tied to a common planning effort, project or sponsor

ARBA maintains extensive public files of information on Bicentennial activities — projects and events. In ARBA terms, a project is a planned activity which may or may not have associated events, depending on method of presentation. A project may be a restoration, historical booklet, tree planting, and the like. ARBA's goal is to catalog all Bicentennial projects, large and small. Information you provide will be printed in the Official Master Register of Bicentennial Activities, and through this publication and other means will be disseminated to other Bicentennial organizations and interested public and private sector groups who are planning, coordinating and supporting Bicentennial activities.

In addition to the Master Register, ARBA prepares two Event Calendar publications containing information on Bicentennial events of interest to audiences outside of your immediate organization, community, or neighborhood. An event, in ARBA terms, is something happening at a specific time or a specific date in a specific place. Publication of information on your event will help in planning publicity, visitor services, tour and travel arrangements, and so forth.

This form is for information on all Bicentennial activities and projects without events, for publication in the Master Register. It is NOT an application for an ARBA grant or for official recognition. However, this form must accompany such applications.

INSTRUCTIONS

This form is to provide information for ARBA's quarterly Comprehensive Calendar of Bicentennial Events and other event publications. If a group or series of events are tied to a common planning effort, project or sponsor, use one or more of these forms plus a Bicentennial Project Register Form. Keep in mind that a minimum of one month is required to process this form for inclusion in the Comprehensive Calendar.

Event information you provide will be given wide dissemination by other Bicentennial organizations, the tour and travel industry, and the mass media. Please complete all applicable blanks to facilitate advanced planning travel, tourism and publicity. If event time schedules can't be simply stated in items 4-5, use "Further Description" above.

Submission or publication of an event confers no official recognition or sanction by ARBA. Direct all questions regarding recognition, grants and licensing to other appropriate ARBA headquarters divisions or regional offices. Return this form, through your official Bicentennial organization, to Master Calendar Services at this address:
